

Interview Story Bank Worksheet

Prepare evidence, not answers. Six stories at this depth will answer almost any structured interview question.

How to use this worksheet

Fill one block per story from your real experience. Write facts, not scripts — in the interview you'll retrieve, not recite. Rehearse each story out loud at least once.

A hard problem you solved

- Situation (2 sentences — enough context to make the stakes clear):

- MY actions (specifically yours, not the team's — this is where probes go):

- Outcome (with a number if one exists):

- What I'd do differently now:

A failure you owned

- Situation (2 sentences — enough context to make the stakes clear):

- MY actions (specifically yours, not the team's — this is where probes go):

- Outcome (with a number if one exists):

- What I'd do differently now:

A conflict you handled

- Situation (2 sentences — enough context to make the stakes clear):

- MY actions (specifically yours, not the team's — this is where probes go):

- Outcome (with a number if one exists):

- What I'd do differently now:

A time priorities collapsed

- Situation (2 sentences — enough context to make the stakes clear):

- MY actions (specifically yours, not the team's — this is where probes go):

- Outcome (with a number if one exists):

- What I'd do differently now:

Something you built or improved

- Situation (2 sentences — enough context to make the stakes clear):

- MY actions (specifically yours, not the team's — this is where probes go):

- Outcome (with a number if one exists):

- What I'd do differently now:

A time you changed your mind

- Situation (2 sentences — enough context to make the stakes clear):

- Outcome (with a number if one exists):

- What I'd do differently now:

In the room

- Answer the question asked, then stop. Structured interviewers probe for what they need.
- Say 'I', not 'we', when it was you.
- Real beats ideal — vagueness is what rubrics score down hardest.
- Take the two-second pause to pick the right story. It reads as composure.
